or Karen Ogle, a professor in the College of Human Medicine, caring for people at the end of their lives is the most life-affirming thing she has done in the field of medicine. While end-of-life care may seem like a depressing occupation, Ogle has dedicated her research to the development of pain management and has found the rewards greatly outweigh the challenges. “The challenges certainly are the sadness and the loss,” Ogle said. “But the way it enriches my life has been very worth it.”

While in school, Ogle noticed the importance of end-of-life care when a patient with an advanced illness in her family practice wanted to stay at home. Hospice care was in the very early stages, and she knew doctors were capable of more. From there, her work began to deal more with hospice care and pain management.

For 28 years, Ogle has served the Department of Family Medicine in the College of Human Medicine. After making great strides for pain management, she retired in October 2009. She joins the Pain and Palliative Care Service at the St. Mary’s Health Care in Grand Rapids for the next phase in her career.
